AN

OF A

PRACTICAL GRAMMAR;

OR,

An Enquiry after a more easie and certain help to the Construing and Pearcing of AUTHORS; and to the Making and Speaking of Latin.

Containing a Sett of Latins answerable to the most Fundamental Rules of Grammar, and delivered in an easie Method for the first Beginners to make Latin, at their entrance on the Rules of Construction.

By Christopher Wase, M. A. Teacher of the Free-School at Tunbridge in Kent.

TO THE READER.

IT must not be denied, That the present Age hath brought to light great helps to the instruction of Youth in the Latin tongue. For those who in foreign parts have invented means for the expediting of this, it may suffice to instance in that great Regulator of School-Policy, who hath much matured the Learning of Tongues, the Reverend and Singularly ingenious Comenius. At home, divers happy pieces have been published; with all which, it might further conduce to the facilitating that employment, if the work of making Latin were put into an orderly & artificial course, which seems to have been left too much at large, not with us only, but in other parts, as far as I can understand. I hope it will be approved to the Judicious Reader, that this labour is not unnecessary, if he shall with me reflect,

I. That there are wholly wanting assistances of Technical Books, which might draw on Children to the exercise of the several or most principal operations of the Grammar in train, for translating out of the Vulgar into Latin.

It would turn to better account, if as the Children are intruſted with any ſtock, they were required to trade with it, and were directed orderly to refund it in practice.

II. That it is more difficult to learn the Reaſon of the Latin Tongue by pearcing of Authors, than by making Latins; the inveſtigation of the Theam from the Obliques, being far more various than the deſcending from the Theam to the Obliques, by certain and uniform Characteriſticks.

III. That it is evident by an Induction of the ſeveral arts, amidſt which we converſe; That as without the direction of a Maſter, it is difficult by bare practice to arrive to the perfection or truth of an Art: So that neither is it much riddance, if a Maſter ſhould couch in writing the ſeveral operations of his whole Art, and exact of his Novice to commit it all to memory, and end before he fall to practice any particulars of it, and thereby to underſtand them: But the moſt eaſie, ſpeedy, and familiar way is, after very ſhort, general Inſtructions, concerning the terms of that Art premiſed, if the Learner put his hand to the work, that particular Problems be laid down in a clear direction; this followed with manifold working, that reviewed and poliſhed with continual correction. Thus the underſtanding will run parallel with the memory; for we then only know a rule of working, when we can do the work.

IV. To

IV. To distribute Grammar into Problems, makes it more comprehensible to a narrow-sighted understanding, and more portable for the weak memory of a Child; that strength may in a convenient time remove a Sack of Corn into a Store-house, if it be parcelled into proportionable burthens; which can in no time carry it away, by heaving to list at once, that which is a burden over-proportioned to it.

V. This may be some defence for the seeming compass that this method carries the Learner about; for the attainment of Arts and Sciences, is well compared to the climbing a steep Hill. Our fancy may contrive to spring up perpendicularly, but it will be found the most feisible and easie way to gain the top by a spiral ascent.

VI. Hereby different Capacities are comprehended, quicker Apprehensions will be informed and confirmed, and brought to a habit of ready working, while the slower are not discouraged, nor wholly left behind: Some wits are of a more yielding, others of a more sturdy nature. Now each single instance propounded to be wrought, is as a knock of a Hammer to rivet into the understanding and memory, that Rule upon which it depends in the working, and the several heads of sense serve the more to clinch it down.

VII. Nor is it any real compass that this method takes more than others, if we consider the perpetual parts and repetitions used in learning the Grammar; for to work by the same rule in forty examples, is less tedious both to Master and Scholar and makes more to the understanding that rule, and is not longer than to repeat and hear the rule forty times over.

VIII. Yet because wits are not of equal acuteness, and some do more readily apprehend the propounded rule than others can; If a single Pupil be instructed, when he sufficiently perceives the operation, and the particular Cases of it are salved, it matters not, that he be detained to pass through all those proofs that are here offered (which yet would be not without profit to him) but he may speed on to the following Fundamental Canons: and there will be no abruptness in such proceeding, only if the rule be carried before in the understanding. The best expedition for Forms, is, That upon discovery of differing parts, they be not unequally matched: So that the prudence of the Master may make it neither too long for the more quick, nor too short for the more slow. And as the received method is a means to discover the inequality of memories, so this will be helpful to try the quickness of apprehensions.

IX. That the examples ar not very coherent, not classical, but plain; and the way hath some what of new in it; these several Objections admit a distinct solution, not very difficult to be found found out;the firſt only muſt be excuſed, the latter three defended and owned. Indeed it were to be approved,that beſides the truth of a Rule,a conſtant harmony of Senſe might run through the whole body of examples in the Art:For then the mind would be leſs diſtracted,and dwell more willingly upon its work, & the intention of the inſtances be more evident. If it be narrowly looked into,this hath been attempted in the preſent Scheme(however the difficulty of the matter, with the inability of the Author, may have occaſioned a coming ſhort of what may be in this point imagined and deſired)ſo that a diſ-joyned Conformity,&grateful Variety,have been aimed at in the whole;the Heads of Senſe being drawn from the World, Natural, Artificial or Moral; Neither are they yet more unſuitable to one another,than the Examples throughoutthe received Grvmmar.Now that this might be effected, it was ſecondly proper to caſt a Sett of Sentences,rather than to no advantage, ambitiouſly to collect them from the Authors of Latin.Why muſt it be ſtood upon to atteſt the conſtant and ordinary expreſſions of the Tongue from the pure Writers?or what are Tully,Seneca,Terence, Virgill, Ovid,to him that enters on his Accidents? Is not the Maſter's authority to him more known and more important? Ariſtotle ſaith rightly, The Learner muſt believe. I have herein aſſerted that freedom to Grammar, which Writers of other Arts take to themselves, and Comenius the great advancer of Didacticks does ordinarily challenge. These were thirdly, calculated for the weakest capacities of raw and tender beginners, to be familiar in Sense and Analogous (ordinarily) in construction, and laid even one by another in an orderly contexture, wherein nothing sublime or profound, nothing anomalous, nothing prepostorous, might trouble the young Learner; and if this be blamed, with as just reason may a Nurse or Mother be blamed who should remove out of the way whatever might be occasion of stumbling to her Child that is upon practising to go alone. No ground is plain enough to preserve Children from knocks at that time; nor can any method be so clear, but Novices will at first be apt to mistake till they be set upright; the charge must here lie rather after an information, whether it be plain enough. Fourthly, If upon an enquiry it appear to design somewhat unattempted hitherto by the several Compilers of Grammar, whether at home or abroad, this will vindicate the Author from the imputation of a Plagiary. Indeed here is offered at an artificial System of Vulgars (as some term them) or (exercises of Translation from the Mother-tongue into Latin; therefore by others from the opposite term called) Latines (as what they are to be made.) The whole care of this hath hitherto been been left to the leiſure of Maſters, who are either put to the trouble of perpetual dictating Latins proper to the proficiency of thoſe Forms which they inſtruct, or elſe to put them to ſome Engliſh Author, and exact of them to tranſlate tasks out of it; which is at once to lay the whole weight of the Latin Grammar upon a Beginners ſhoulders: We bring them to pearce Latin, by leading them through Sententiæ Pueriles, and Pueriles Confabulatiuncu-læ, and Corderius Colloquies, and ſo to Æſop's Fables, Cato's Diſtichs, Terence, and the eaſier pieces of Ovid and Tully. Ought not the ſame condeſcention to be uſed in requiring the Work from them? ſhould they be at once, at the very firſt engaged upon the whole work of Grammar promiſcuouſly? Allowing that they have the whole body of Grammar in their memories; yet if they have it not in their underſtandings, it is but like Caſh committed to their keeping locked up; they ſhould be accountable only for ſo much as is intruſted to them under their own Key. Now a ſingle example does very difficultly open to ſo young Beginners a general rule; but manifold practice ſliding from the Vulgar to the Latin Tongue, is a more certain and ready Key. And beſides this difficulty to the Learner, promiſcuous Latins are an inſufficient proof of Grammar skill; they are inequitable to the young Student, and inadæquate to the work, Contingent practice cannot without a great tract of time, let one into a full knowledg of any Art, nor does it then certainlv. Theſe two Reaſons may ſerve to maintain the Introduction of the Latin Praxis to be proved by the Rule, concurrently with the Engliſh: By which Analyſis & Geneſis of Latin, it may become familiar to them to aſcend from the Obliques to the Theam, and to deſcend from the Theam to the Obliques, as a Seaman attains by cuſtom to run up & down the Ladder of a Maſt, which would be difficult to one not practiſed to it. Nor is this method conſiderably differing from the received way in Schools, but only a ſuperinducing of a further help, which may appear to have been wanting in carrying them on in their received Authors.

X What I apprehend a more material Objection, is; That though my liberty in conceiving Examples be allowed, though the way be granted pleaſant, becauſe more coherent than ordinary, eaſie, & ſo far new, as is not abhorrent from, but ſubſervient unto the received order of Teaching: Yet theſe proceedings while they indulge the eaſe of the Learner, lead him by fallible way-marks; when he lanches into an Author, he ſhall not find thoſe meaſured uniform clauſes, thoſe intire ſentences, thoſe analogous parts; another face of Oration will preſent it ſelf. He muſt engage with language in a ſtile different from the Engliſh compoſition:

which way will our young Practitioner in La-tin, now turn himſelf? If the artificial and umbratile method fail in encounters with natural language, it delights fairly; but inconveniences foreſeen are in a fair way to be prevented. The way-marks of the Latin language, are the Terminations of Nouns and Verbs principally, with other accidents of the Tongue which are more evidently propounded, and rendred more familiar by uſe in this method. The eaſineſs which ariſes from ſuiting the clauſes under their Rule, from giving entire ſentences, from picking out regular parts of the ſentence, from putting a compoſition commenſurate to the known order of our Native Tongue, only prepare the Learner to be acquainted with, and promt in the Declenſions and Conjugations, by paſſing on without rubs. It hinders not, that a child may grow up to travel in rugged ways, who hath learned to ſet his ſteps upon the ſmootheſt pavement, & from before whom, at firſt, all cauſes of ſtumbling have been ſtudiouſly removed; yet even this formality is endeavoured to be taken off, by throwing ſeveral ſentences under their proper Rule, into an arbitrary order in Verſes, by ſubjoyning Obſervations concerning the peculiar compoſition of the Latin Tongue, by drawing up the Anomalies into a Synoptical Table, by adviſing the Learner of the uſual abridgment of ſentences (eſpecially when he is carried on to look into the construction of Zeugmatical periods) by summing up divers Rules into one Recapitulatory Practice (whereby those contrived equalities fall off, and only the Rule sticks by.)

carried

XI. Now, though it be admitted, that this course is profitable to the Learner of Latin, it will not therefore follow, that a like innovation would be as useful in learning the Greek, because there is a disparity of Reason. This is taken up by Children, and those wholly unacquainted with the Art of Grammar; that is superadded to them grown more adult, and well versed in the Latin Grammar, especially when the Accidents of the Latin are far more incommensurate to the English, than those of Greek are to Latin.

XII. The only Postulate of this Method, is, That the Scholar be able to write, who shall do well to have a Dictionary of his own; & is further desired to get a Paper-Book, wherein to enter his Latins fair after correction, that so he may have by him a Sententiæ Pueriles, which he may frequently read with understanding and delight, as being of his own making.

XIII. The desired benefit of it is, that the industrious Student may understand Grammar and with ease pass on unto, and with speed & profit pass through the received Authors.

XIV. I find by a Book newly published and ome to my hand, that a like design hath been ontrived & successfully practised by Mr. Charles ool. I have reason to be much confirmed by the stimony of so worthy an Author, whom, ough by face unknown, yet from his Translati-es seen by me, and the Preface to Cato's Distichs, have honoured not only as candid and indu-rious, but acutely judicious in Didacticks: Not at I should pass by, his being experienced in aching, who was (as I collect from his New Dis-very of the old Art of teaching School) a School-aster, before I was a School-Boy. In the last men-oned Book pag. 57, 58. also 118, 119, 120. his otion concerning such like Scheme, and his pro-ess and practice in it, are expresst. I promise my lf when I shall attain to see his pieces of this ature published, that the defects in this Essay ay be much redressed: And this my attempt ay confer if nothing of light or strength to the ork, yet the weight of a witness to the way. 8th page 112. 115.

XV. I can safely from Experience testifie, con-rning the one part of this Work, that is, the rain of Englishes to be done into Latin, that ereby without much tediousness, either of Scho-r or Teacher, the attentive Learner hath with eed & ease been let in to a steady skill of ma-ing Latin, and to perceive with evidence, the ontexture of the Latin stile. What is further ontributed hereto by the other Additionals, the ork not being published through want of Co-ies, I could not make trial; the reasons of adding hem, have been above mentioned. BEing required to render an account of the Etymological p of this Grammar contained in the two first Leaves, as the Order, Sufficiency, and use of it, I do thus endeavour to form it briefly.

The Verb I consider according to the Character of the Infiniti given as short (answering the Barytone of the Greek*) or l (in an equal number of Conjugations, with their Circumflex contract Verbs): The first is the most Simple and Standard the rest, especially in the Tenses deducible from the second Theam therefore here premitted; and these Tenses in the long Verbs repeated.*

In Conjugating, the Lad is required to give the first Theam, th the Infinitive, which characterizes it Long or Short; To whi in course, may be subjoyned the two Participles that descend fr it, as Tego, tegere; tegens, tegendus: Afterwards the cond Theam with its Infinitive, concluding the two Particip descending from it, Texi, texisse; tectus, tecturus. In nendus the three Gerunds are included, as, i, um, o, in oculu in tectus the two Supines like the Accusative and Ablative vultus, um, u, for they are argued (if not universally agreed) be but Verbal Nouns.

A sixth Tense is transferred from the Subjunctive into the I dicative, because that Tense is observed sometimes to signifie Conjunctively. The Subjunctive Terminations are separated fr the Imperative. This for the Verb.

In the Noun, the first and second Declensions are shifted cording to the true and natural order of the Hebrew Gramm rians; and the course of derivation for Asper is before Aspe not the contrary. The Terminations also of the Obliques are down nakedly as they are to be wrought. I only add this, t this premised part being other-where learned, (as out of Grammar of Lilly*) yet the Practical part, which is the body the Book, will make the whole work of the Scholar more pla and easily parcelled out unto him.*
